Nkrumah's Rap At U. S.

RECENTLY a special, slick-paper color section about Ghana was published in some metropolitan papers. It was a paid advertisement, extolling the industrial accomplishments of this small African country and the good sense of President Kwame Nkrumah and inviting foreign investment.

Now Nkrumah is out with a book, which he has been distributing among African leaders. In this petulant volume, Nkrumah rafts against Washington as the "citadel of neocolonialism," attacks all overseas U. S. agencies from the CIA to the Peace Corps, as well as the International Monetary Fund, and alleges a collusion among American, British, French and Belgian capitalists to dominate Africa.

The book just about makes last week's extravagant advertising a waste of printing effort and money.
